The Man from Montana at Sea. The American steamship line has abandoned a carefully elaborated plan of feeding its passengers on course dinners instead of allowing them to order STIAN FLORING & PLANING Milds, what they choose from the bill of fare and getting it at once. On the last eastward trip of the steamer Paris the experiment was tried—but only twice. Passengers who wanted a slice of chicken and then a frantic scramble to the dick with a look at the sea, all in the space of ten seconds, had to wait until the rest had eaten their way through strata of hors d'œuvre, soup, fish, entree, &c., before they could get their chicken.

The first meal served in this fashion was very well put on, and would have been voted a distinct success on land, but it took two hours to eat, and the vessel wouldn't keep still while it was being eaten. It was a splendid thing for these of the seasick, who wanted only soup, and they were delighted.

But the others weren't.

Next day those of the passengers who had recovered talked it over and decided that the new plan was not brilliant. The question arose, however, of who should bell the cat and head the protest. After some search a Montana man, with a voice like a fog horn playing an accomniment to an unoiled buzz saw, was stimulated up to the sticking point, and primed with a speech and a resolution to offer at the dinner table.

They had got as far as the entrees on the second night when the Montana man suddenly rose, His stentorian "Ladies and gendemen" was heard, not only all over the ship, but in the next world and other places. Murnums of approbation greeted him. In sad term be enumerated the woes and trials of the seasick, who tried to bore all the way through a course dinner, and he demanded an immediate return of eating the pudding first if you so at Druggists or by

"Out in Montana," said he, "we York. have everything put on the table at once, and each fellow starts where he as a mind to. Some folks like to begin with the coffee and end with the sorp. Freedom is the basis of the American flag."

As he went on he became even more enthusiastic and magnetic than this strictly pure.

A Woman's Work .- A sad story is that of a young man of this city, whose name for obvious reasons, is emitted. Five years ago he was an intelligent and well to-do man, having about $25-000 worth of property. About that time he met and fell in love with a pretty, interesting girl, whose large, of grey eyes and masges of dark curly SONAL PROPERTY hair enchained his heart in a way that TIAL. made everything else in life of little interest. He loved and thought he was loved in return; for, unskilled in the knowledge of women, he accepted ber actions and protestations as proofs of her affection and through one golden summer he was wildly happy.

Then came the change—she began to grow cold, and finally told him sne lov-AND JOBBERS OF SPECIALTIES ed another man. He tried to bear up under the cruel blow—to go about as junt ALEXANDRIA. VA. usual, and take an interest in life. But he was too sorely burt, and within a letter. asylum, within a padded cell-a raving maniac. Finally the violence left him, and he fell into a silent, melancholy condition, more hopeless of cure than the wildest ravings.

He was discharged from the asylum as "harmless" and can be seen daily on streets of Richmond, wandering aimlessly up and down, pressing his hands to his head in a bewildered way —a sad exponent of the result of woman's indictive.—Richmond State.
